

SHOT TO DEATH IN SAVING LOVER'S LIFE.

Brooklyn Girl Dashed Between Guerin and Man Shooting at Him.

NELLIE VAN VLEET, THE VICTIM.

Nellie Van Vleet gave her life for that of her sweetheart, Leon Guerin, and today her dead body lies at an undertaker's shop at 1774 Fulton street, Brooklyn.

As he faced the muzzle of a loaded revolver she threw herself in front of him to shield him, and received the bullet intended for Guerin. It pierced her brain and she dropped to the floor a corpse.

The tragedy occurred in Courtney's Hotel, at Fulton street and Vesta avenue, Brooklyn. Bernard McCormack, the bartender of the hotel, who did the shooting, is under arrest.

Guerin, with two men and one woman, are also under arrest as witnesses. Nellie Van Vleet was twenty-two years old. She had been acquainted with young Guerin for a considerable time. He lives at 205 Patchen avenue, in the neighborhood of the girl's home. They had frequently gone out together, and last night Guerin called for her and took her to the Brooklyn Music Hall.

Courtney's Hotel is nearby, and after the performance Guerin invited the girl to go there for some refreshment.

They went into a rear room of the saloon where women are received. They ordered drinks and were served. There were a number of men and several women in the place, two of the latter being Beale Wood and Gertrude Hovey, of 73 Rockaway avenue.

Angry words coming from the room attracted the attention of McCormack. He went in after Guerin and the Van Vleet woman had entered. He went into the place and found Guerin quarrelling with the woman. Guerin struck her several times and she wept. McCormack remonstrated with Guerin and the latter got angry and made a snarl.

When more drinks were ordered by the young man McCormack refused to serve them.

This enraged Guerin and according to the police he seized a glass and flung it at the bartender. McCormack dodged and the glass missed him. Guerin followed up with a second glass which grazed McCormack's head.

As Guerin rose to his feet from the table to continue the attack, McCormack ran into the barroom and grabbed a revolver from behind the bar. Then he went back to the rear room.

As the bartender rushed in with the revolver in his hand there was a panic among the occupants of the place. The women screamed and made a rush for the door. The men followed them.

"Get out of here!" he yelled at Guerin, "or I'll blow your head off."

But the threat did not scare the man. Instead of getting out he seized another glass and let it fly at McCormack. The bartender dodged again and raised his weapon.

The Van Vleet woman saw the movement. "Oh, don't kill him!" she screamed, as she sprang forward and threw herself in front of Guerin, her body completely shielding his.

McCormack's revolver cracked. There was a moment's silence following the report and then the sound of a heavy fall.

Without a groan the woman tumbled at the feet of the man whose life she had saved and lay on her face, blood spurting from a wound in the back of her head.

McCormack dropped the revolver and ran to her aid.

"You've killed her," Guerin said, as he made for the door and escaped.

McCormack was later arraigned before Magistrate Worth, in the Gates Avenue Court, on the charge of homicide. He was held without bail for examination on Nov. 8. He made no statement.

Several persons were held as witnesses in bonds of $50 each.

HURT BY FIREWORKS.

Explosives Went Off in Man's Hand as He Watched Parade.

Jacob Stein, twenty-one years old, of Lewis street, in Bellevue Hospital, his right hand shattered and mangled. He was injured by the premature explosion of some fireworks he had as he was watching a political parade along Avenue B.

Two fingers of his hand were torn off, the member was shattered and mangled. It was feared it would have been amputated.

DEATH OF OLD MINSTREL.

Frank Girard Dies After a Short Illness in Brooklyn.

After an illness of only one week Frank Girard, better known by his stage name of Frank Girard, died yesterday at his home, 182 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn. Diabetes and paralysis were the cause of death.

Girard was sixty years of age and was an old-time minstrel. He was stage manager of Tony Pastor's Theatre until Howard's years ago.

MRS. GWYNNE IS NOW IN CANADA.

No Proceedings Have Been Begun Yet for a Separation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—While Washington society is busy discussing the domestic troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Gwynne no step has been taken toward a legal separation. The couple were married with the highest hopes and expectations on March 25, 1896, the bridegroom being a nephew of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and the bride a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Steele, well known in Washington society.

They have three children, two boys and one girl, the youngest born about one year ago. Their honeymoon was spent in Paris, where friends of Mrs. Gwynne say the young bridegroom caused his wife much distress, while she continued to be an affectionate wife and devoted mother and endeavored in every way to conceal her trouble from her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Gwynne remained in Paris nearly three years. Mr. Gwynne preceded his wife back to the United States and located in New York City. Mrs. Gwynne and her children followed three months later and took a cottage at Narragansett, where Mr. Gwynne joined them.

They remained there all summer, and it is said Mrs. Gwynne's troubles continued. Last winter Mrs. Gwynne and the children came to Washington to visit her parents. Mr. Gwynne accompanied them to this city, but Mrs. Gwynne still seemed distressed.

In the Spring Mr. and Mrs. Gwynne and their children went to Cobourg, Canada, where Mr. and Mrs. Steele are accustomed to spend their summers. Suddenly Mr. Gwynne returned to New York and went to his mother, who finds it difficult to believe the accusations made against him.

At present Mrs. Gwynne and her children are in Canada, where they expect to remain indefinitely. They will probably be joined by Mr. and Mrs. Steele this winter.

NOTE.—We wish to impress upon your minds again that we practically bought this great stock in bulk. There were a few odd lots of inferior and damaged lots of Wertheimer's gloves sold to outsiders. Some concerns are advertising gloves bought at this Field, Chapman sale which are not Wertheimer's manufacture at all. This is a hint to be on guard.
